UK Outlook for Tuesday 14 Dec 2021 to Thursday 23 Dec 2021:
Generally unsettled throughout the period, with cloud and outbreaks of rain clearing eastwards at first. Perhaps some frost in the north, but then rain and strong winds likely following from the west. Looking to be drier for many central and eastern locations, with some potentially heavy rain arriving to northern and western areas at times, accompanied by a risk of gales. The best chance of drier and brighter conditions in the east. Temperatures are looking to be rather mild throughout. Towards the end of the period, settled conditions may develop, however the north and west perhaps experiencing some longer spells of rain. Temperatures likely remaining rather mild, though a risk of frost is possible during some colder interludes.
